PROGRAM NOTES

Lukas Foss

(Born 1922 in Berlin; died 2009 in New York)

“Composer’s Holiday” from Three American Pieces for violin and piano (1944)

Lukas Foss was born in Germany and emigrated to the United States as a teenager in 1937. The young composer quickly absorbed the American style championed by Aaron Copland, especially after he conducted Copland’s Billy the Kid at Tanglewood in 1942. Foss later recalled, “I had fallen in love with America because of people like Aaron.” Foss received his first major recognition with The Prairie, a cantata based on poetry by Carl Sandburg, which won a New York Music Critics’ Circle Award. In 1944, while his cantata was receiving performances in major venues around the country, Foss wrote his Three American Pieces (called Three Pieces at the time). Violinist Roman Totenberg and the composer premiered them at Carnegie Hall on November 13, 1944. “Composer’s Holiday” is a virtuosic modern take on an old-fashioned fast-fiddling hoedown.

From Cho-Liang Lin:

Jon Kimura Parker and I were college schoolmates at Juilliard. Everyone calls him Jackie. We have been friends for decades. I admire his playing and artistry greatly. When I joined the faculty at Rice University, Jackie was already teaching there. We naturally started playing together, first on the Rice campus, then we started touring together. We just released an album of sonatas by Paul Schoenfield, John Harbison, and Steven Stucky—three major works which we premiered. If it were not for the pandemic, I would have toured Australia with Jackie for three weeks.

Antonín Dvořák

(Born 1841 in Nelahozeves, Czech Republic; died 1904 in Prague)

“Larghetto” from Sonatina in G Major for Violin and Piano, Op. 100 (1893)

In 1892, Antonín Dvořák came to New York, lured by an enormous salary to direct the National Conservatory, a short-lived but influential music institution. In addition to running the school, he was tasked with developing a national style of classical music, as he had done in his native Bohemia. Dvořák studied African-American and Native American music and began writing in a new, simpler style inspired by spirituals and Indigenous melodies. In September 1893, Dvořák visited Minnehaha Falls in Minnesota, and while there, he was inspired to write the first theme of this larghetto. Though it is part of the sonatina, the “Larghetto” has long been performed alone as well. Violinist Fritz Kreisler popularized his own arrangement under the title Indian Lament. (A 1914 recording is available at the Library of Congress).

From Lin:

America is my adopted home. I have championed the music of many composers. With American music, one tends to stop at Gershwin, Bernstein, and perhaps some Samuel Barber. But the fact is there are great composers writing great music in this country. It has always been so, and it continues to be so. Through my capacity as a violinist and as the music director of La Jolla SummerFest for eighteen years, I have tried my utmost to commission new compositions, not only for me but for many instrumental and vocal combinations. I am proud to say I have instigated the creation of at least seventy works at the current count. I am still going.

Peter Ilyich Tchaikovsky

(Born 1840 in Kamsko-Votkinsk, Russia; died in 1893 in St. Petersburg)
Sextet for Two Violins, Two Violas, and Two Cellos, Op. 70, “Souvenir de Florence,” (1890)

Peter Tchaikovsky loved Florence, Italy, and visited many times. His last stay there was January to April 1890, while working on his opera The Queen of Spades. After returning to Russia, he began this string sextet for the St. Petersburg Chamber Music Society. Tchaikovsky initially struggled to write for sextet, “One requires six independent yet homogeneous voices. This is unimaginably difficult.” Still, he finished the piece in a few weeks and was initially happy with it, until a private performance at his apartment made him decide to revise it. He completed the edits in early 1892 and added the nickname “Souvenir de Florence.” The St. Petersburg Chamber Music Society premiered it on December 7, 1892.

Tchaikovsky never explained the Italian connection, and the piece’s Italian moments tend to be fleeting. The first movement begins with a driving main theme that gives way to a lighter, more Italianate second theme. The pent-up energy from the main theme dominates the movement and leads to an explosive finish. The second movement, alternately hymnal and melodic, is the lightest and most Italian-inspired of the piece. The third movement returns to the driving energy of the beginning, this time with a folk-like main theme. The last movement begins with another folk-like melody and culminates in a fugue, the ultimate in independent voice writing.

From Lin:

I always loved music, according to my mother. When I was a toddler, my next-door neighbor, a boy two years older, started to learn the violin. I went to hear him practice every day. This violin fascination superseded cartoons and toys. So, when I was 5, my father brought home a quarter-size violin. I started lessons and never stopped.

My violin is the 1715 Stradivari called “Titian.” Someone thought the beautiful varnish reminded him of paintings by the Venetian master. Or it was simply a sales job. It had been used by two great violinists—Efrem Zimbalist and Arthur Grumiaux.
